Alumnus Honored For Service To Community

A distinguished list of speakers was joined by nearly 450 persons at a recent testimonial dinner for Clarence W. Nier, '36, Green Bay city attorney for the past 21 years.

Saluting the man who assumed the position of county court judge Jan. 2 were a supreme court justice, a federal judge, mayors with whom he had worked, a fellow attorney, a college president and a football coach.

Nier, who was elected to the bench of County Court Branch 1 last April, was made city attorney emeritus by the City Council to "continue rendering advice and counsel."

State Supreme Court Justice Nathan Heffernan said Nier's "wise counsel and shrewd judgment" is in large measure responsible for Green Bay's progress."

The Rev. D. M. Burke, president of St. Norbert College and one of Nier's former teachers, stated, "I've always been proud of him."

Federal District Judge John Reynolds, former governor and close friend, added, "Few communities are blessed with the presence of a truly remarkable human being."

Packer Coach and general manager Vince Lombardi, with whom Nier works as president of the Stadium Commission, called Nier "very, very esteemed . . . I have learned to respect him."

In acknowledging the praise shown by rich and poor alike, the former golden glove boxer said, "It took me a long time to get here. The boy from Main and Jefferson is grateful to you."

Letters commending Nier were read from Gov. Warren P. Knowles, Rep. John W. Byrnes, Milwaukee attorney John J. Fleming, Marquette University president the Rev. John P. Raynor, S.J., former Packer great Bernard (Boob) Darling and Sister St. Marcellin, former administrator of St. Mary's Hospital in Green Bay, whose advisory committee Nier headed for many years.

SNC Graduate Killed In Vietnam; Parents Receive Silver Star

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Johnson, parents of Lt. Charles L. Johnson '65 who was killed in Vietnam, received his Silver Star during ceremonies on campus.

The nation's third highest medal for gallantry in action was presented before the entire St. Norbert College ROTC Brigade.

The Silver Star citation read:

" . . . while the first platoon was on a reconnaissance mission, the platoon was attacked by a Viet Cong force of unknown size firing anti-tank and automatic weapons. As soon as his platoon came under attack Lt. Johnson directed his platoon into a flanking movement and charged the Viet Cong positions. While he was leading the assault, his armored personnel carrier received a direct hit from an anti-tank weapon and came under intense fire from automatic weapons and hand grenades.

With his vehicle thus disabled and several members of his crew wounded, Lt. Johnson attempted to dismount his vehicle so that he could continue the assault when he was mortally wounded by an enemy hand grenade. Still responding to Lt. Johnson's aggressive leadership, the first platoon continued its assault on the position until the enemy positions were silenced.

Lt. Johnson's aggressive reaction and outstanding leadership inspired his men and enabled them to rout a well entrenched enemy force. Lt. Johnson's gallantry in action is in keeping with the highest traditions of the military service and reflects great credit upon himself, his unit, the 25th Infantry Division, and the United States Army."

Science Hall Dedicated

St. Norbert's new $2.8 million science building has officially opened its doors and come to life.

Dedication ceremonies for the Dr. John R. Minahan Science Hall were held Oct. 29 in an auditorium of the new building with about 300 persons in attendance including St. Norbert faculty and about 50 representatives from other colleges and universities.

Main speaker for the event was Dr. Kenneth Endicott, director of the National Cancer Institute and Chairman of the President's Lung Cancer Task Force. He received an honorary degree during the ceremonies.

Auxiliary Bishop John D. Grellinger blessed and sealed the cornerstone while the audience heard a hymn by the St. Norbert College Chamber Singers.

Dr. Endicott's honorary doctorate of science was conferred by the Very Rev. D. M. Burke, college president, and the hood and diploma were presented him by Rt. Rev. S. M. Killeen, abbot chancellor of the college. The abbot also said a few words about the culmination of a dream of the 1920's in the erection "of this science building worthy of the name."

Referring to the building Dr. Endicott said that the facility's most important contribution will be "the exposure of all students to some knowledge of science, without which it's becoming difficult to live."

Biology Lab

Fr. Keefe is congratulated.

He noted that the gap between science and the humanities is widening, but said, "Science is too important to leave to the scientists. The whole society must be in control of science." Thus its inclusion in a liberal arts college curriculum is as important as the graduates who become scientists or physicians.

Another part of the dedication program included unveiling of plaques honoring Dr. Minahan and Victor McCormick and other major donors. These include Leo T. Crowley, chairman of the college board of governors; the late Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Liebmann of

Lecture Hall

Green Bay and the late William A. Reiss of Sheboygan. Another plaque honors the Rev. Anselm M. Keefe, O. Praem., former dean of the college and emeritus professor of biology.

Additional plaques will be erected later to honor other donors.

The four-story and penthouse structure houses the chemistry, biology, physics, mathematics, psychology and geography departments. Special features are a science library, a 1,200 square foot greenhouse, an animal laboratory and a computer center.

Malevich and Madden Alma Mater Recipients

John Malevich '29 and Dr. William Madden '42 were recipients of the 1967 St. Norbert College Alma Mater Awards which were presented at halftime of the Homecoming football game.

The Alma Mater Awards are given annually to alumni, members of their immediate families or former faculty members "for vocational success and outstanding service in Christian life."

A native of Eveleth, Minn., Malevich attended public schools there before enrolling at St. Norbert in 1925 and two years later he transferred to Catholic University in Washington, D. C.

At Catholic U. Malevich earned varsity letters in football, boxing and track for three successive years. He captained the football and boxing teams his senior year, going undefeated in the last two years of boxing and gaining honorable mention on the All America football team.

When he graduated from Catholic U. in 1930 he was one of six students eligible for the valedictory of the senior class which numbered 634 students.

Malevich coached football and basketball at St. Norbert for three seasons before accepting the coaching assignment at Eveleth Junior College in 1934. After time out for three years in the U. S. Navy, he was named athletic director of the Eveleth Public Schools, including the junior college, a position he still holds.

Until surgery curtailed his activities three years ago, Malevich was one of the most active sports officials in Minnesota. He was the only official assigned to the Minnesota State Basketball Tournament five straight years. He has officiated Golden Gloves events as well as college boxing matches.

Mr. and Mrs. Malevich have three daughters, two of whom are graduates of the University of Minnesota and a third who graduated from St. Cloud State College. A son, John, Jr., is a junior at the University of Minnesota.

One of seven brothers, Dr. Madden graduated from St. Norbert in 1942 and then attended Marquette University medical school where he graduated in 1946.

After an internship at Milwaukee County Hospital he served in the U.S. Army for two years before returning to the county hospital for his residency.

Dr. Madden was a general practitioner in Racine from 1950 to 1955 and then he returned to the Milwaukee County General Hospital for a residency in obstetrics and gynecology. He has been an obstetrician and gynecologist in Racine for the past nine years.

Active in community affairs, Dr. Madden has served on the boards of directors of Racine Family Service, Racine United Fund, Dominican Sisters Motherhouse, Milwaukee Gynecologic Society, among others. He is also a member of Serra Club, Holy Name Society and a Mass moderator.

An amateur coin collector and golfer, Dr. Madden has also served as president of Racine Country Club

Dr. and Mrs. Madden have three children . . . Dennis, serving in the U.S. Navy; John, a freshman at St. Thomas College; and Maureen, a high school sophomore.

Alumni Tour Planned

The St. Norbert College alumni association announces a tour to Europe being offered next summer to alumni, parents, friends and their families. The tour will depart from New York on July 18 by jet for Paris. After 22 days of fun and excitement, visiting eight countries of Central Europe, the tour will return on August 8.

Every day will be a delightful experience in the most fascinating cities on the continent of Europe.

The tour price of $895 includes round-trip transportation from New York, accommodations, sight-seeing, transportation in Europe and almost all meals. The services of professional guides, thoroughly familiar with European travel, have been secured to assure an enjoyable trip.

Tour members will receive full details on shopping, currency, packing and other arrangements necessary for easy traveling. For complete information, contact the St. Norbert College Public Relations Office.

Business Admn. Changes

"Anyone who graduated two years ago wouldn't recognize the department today." So states Robert Kramer, associate professor and chairman of the business administration department at St. Norbert College, describing the changes and innovations taking place in his field.

"Three years ago we had two full-time faculty members. Today we have six. Formerly we used part-time instructors, businessmen from the area; these have been eliminated in favor of full-time personnel. The department itself has grown faster proportionately than the increase in majors."

The reason? A desire on St. Norbert's part to upgrade the general business administration curriculum and give its students a better background — in short, a complete program.

"Formerly, the only area with any depth was accounting," Kramer said. "We have always had a very complete accounting program at St. Norbert. But we haven't had the depth in marketing, management and finance. In the past two years we have developed two programs: accounting and general business administration area, the latter being divided into marketing, management and finance. In the past we could offer only basic courses but we now offer more in-depth courses in marketing, management and finance."

Another innovation, he pointed out, is a course in Introduction to Computers, now in its second year.

Also being offered is a Senior Seminar, taken all three terms of the senior year. "In this course we try to bring together the thoughts from other courses and relate them to practical business problems, using a case approach. It's designed to help in the area of business problem solving," Kramer said.

During the past two to three years the business administration department has graduated from 50 to 60 students annually, a larger number than any other department at the college.

"Management is the field of greatest interest to students now," Kramer said. "The greatest demand by industry, however, is for accountants," he added, pointing out that the demand is greater than the schools can supply.

"There is a feeling right now among students in this country generally that they've got to have a cause — that going out into business and making money is rather crass. Thus, the number of students entering business administration, particularly at other schools, has not increased proportionately with the enrollments. And as a result, a good, well-trained person in business administration is very much in demand."

Starting salaries for better students last year ranged from $550 to $700 per month, with one or two above, the professor said, adding that any student with a good record has no difficulty in being placed.

"The computer, instead of taking away everybody's job, has upgraded our whole level of labor. There are more high caliber jobs available today," he said.

Starting next fall, Kramer said, his department will offer a course titled "Introduction to Business" principally slanted to freshman majors to give them an overall look at all the areas in business administration so that they will be better equipped to specialize later.

"We are very much concerned with the education of the whole man," Kramer said. "Much of the program — about 50%, in fact — will be requirements from the liberal arts area. The well rounded businessman has to be able to talk about Rembrandt, Chopin, philosophy. The schools have changed their thinking about this in the past 10-15 years. The major is less technical now than it was then."

All faculty members in the business administration department at St. Norbert have had from two to 30 years of actual business experience, Kramer noted.

Summer Session Schedule

Several special programs and workshops, along with 45 regular academic courses, will be offered during the 1968 Summer Session at St. Norbert College. Dates of the six-week session are June 17 through July 30.

Fields of study offering classes are art, biology, business administration, chemistry, economics, education, English, geography, history, Latin, mathematics, music, philosophy, physical science, psychology, sociology, theology and physical education. Maximum load permitted will be two courses.

Special courses include physical science for non-science students, designed for elementary school teachers; a driver education program for unlicensed persons wishing to learn to drive; and an introduction to computer science for teachers.

Art classes in drawing and ceramics will also be open to non-credit students.

A workshop in elementary mathematics will be given July 30 to Aug. 2. Another workshop on human relations will run July 22-26, and a teacher aid institute is scheduled for July 30 to Aug. 2.

In addition, a "College Before College" program offers course work to those who have completed the junior or senior year of high school. Besides 12 college credit courses, it offers a study-skills program to prepare students for college; a high school reading improvement program; a choral workshop for talented high school students; and an honors symposium for high school students, on a scholarship basis, entitled "Turbulent America" Institute.

President Named To Committee

The Very Rev. D. M. Burke, O. Praem., president of St. Norbert, has been named a member of the Executive Committee of the American Association for Higher Education.

Priests, board members and principal-administrators from across the country gathered on the St. Norbert College campus in December for a workshop which studied Catholic boards of education.

Homecoming . . .

Carol Hines, a Bloomfield, Michigan senior reigned as Queen of the 1967 Homecoming festivities. The Green Knights led undefeated Northern Michigan 23-21 in the fourth quarter until a 46-yard field goal by Northern spelled defeat for the Green and Gold.

The Class of '42 celebrated its 25th reunion in conjunction with Homecoming. Members and their wives gathered the night before Homecoming for cocktails and dinner.

The Class of '57 met informally the night before Homecoming and then attended a Communion-Brunch after a Concelebrated Mass the following morning.

Knights Post 5-4 Mark

The Green Knight football team posted a 5-4 mark in 1967, winning three of the last four games. Coach Howie Kolstad called it "a topsy-turvy and not too satisfying season."

He pointed to the 24-23 loss to Northern Michigan as the best game the Knights played. Leading 23-21, St. Norbert lost in the fourth period on a 46 yard field goal.

Kolstad called the 26-0 win over Oshkosh another all-out effort by the Knights.

From Dean King To Chef King

The administrative talents of Dr. Donald B. King, who was appointed Dean of St. Norbert College last April, are well known. What comes as an interesting surprise is his extraordinary cooking ability, a skill which Dr. King equates in importance with that of a poet, although he modestly disclaims the term gourmet when referring to his own.

"Happiness in marriage is founded on the wife's ability to cook — not because the way to a man's heart is through his stomach, but because of her ability to provide the kind of atmosphere that attracts people who are intelligent and exciting," Dr. King pointed out. "To have good taste in food is equivalent to having good taste and discrimination in everything."

The Dean's culinary training started early, in the New England countryside where he was reared. "One of the first jobs I had at eight or nine, for 50 cents a week, was to fill the woodbox of a neighbor lady. She also happened to be the neighborhood cook and did a lot of baking for weddings. She used a lot of wood, and I used to hang around the kitchen. She was a first class cake baker. I can still bake a better cake than you can buy," he smiled.

Even in pre-thermostat days there was a science to heating the stove. Different foods called for different woods. Hard wood like hickory produced level, even heat for long periods. Birch and soft maple were for quick heat, for frying or boiling water.

"The instruments don't matter so much. A cook can handle what she has as long as it is adequate. The goodness of cooking is not in the instruments but in the person," says Dr. King.

By the time he was in high school Dr. King took care of the meals for seven or eight boarders in the neighborhood for 75¢ per meal. In college (at Dartmouth, where he was a "cum laude" graduate) he worked in a restaurant and "did everything."

"Later, in graduate school, (at Princeton where he received a Ph.D. degree in the classics) I didn't work — I was too busy studying — but I used to eat at a restaurant catering to the college trade called the "Petite Chalet." All the students and faculty from those years remember 'Papa' Dupraz, the owner, who had once been Woodrow Wilson's chef at the White House."

Romance blossomed at the "Petite Chalet" and Papa Dupraz eventually became his father-in-law.

Ever since, the love of cooking, good food, and consequently good company, have been a happily recurring theme in the Kings' life. For instance, the family follows the Biblical tradition of having a lamb cooked in bitter herbs for Maundy Thursday, and then they invite the neighbors in to help them eat it.

A typical menu for one of the dinner parties the Kings love to give would go like this: Carbonnades Flammandes, a Flemish stew consisting of beef, onions and a brown sauce (50% brown gravy and 50% beer); broccoli with Mornay sauce, a white sauce made with 50% white cream and 50% Parmesan and Gruyere cheese; green salad with what "I would call a French dressing but no restaurant would" (oil and wine vinegar with roquefort cheese) and zabaglione over pears for dessert.

In years past Dr. King used to study a lot of cookbooks, many in the original French, but it's been a long time since he's needed one. However he noted that Escoffier's "Guide to Modern Cooking" which, while no longer modern, has one of the finest discussions on sauces and soups.

When pressed, there is one tip he would pass on to an aspiring cook: one should use pots and pans big enough. "The ordinary house is so restricted. Our family probably has more large pots and pans than anyone I know. Of course we cooked for a lot of people." (The Kings have six children). "No one comes into our home and goes away hungry."

His favorite dish? "I never thought of it. I like food. But I do especially like all kinds of spaghetti." Dr. King's spaghetti is based on a recipe he got from an Italian chef. He starts out with a mixture of carrots, onion, celery and garlic, softened in butter and one tablespoon wine. Brown the ground beef. Add olive oil, tomato paste, and wine (red or Marsala) and sometimes cheese, and seasonings.

The only food Dr. King hasn't found very good here is fruit ("there isn't the variety"). The family likes Green Bay and finds similarities to New England. "When it snows here there is a stillness. You don't get that everywhere — it's an atmospheric condition."

Three of the six children are still at home — a son who is a sophomore at St. Norbert, another son who is a senior at Abbot Pennings High School and a daughter in 7th grade at St. Boniface in De Pere.

Another son is a cook in the Air Force in Okinawa. Teaching a boy to cook is definitely not sissy, Dr. King emphasizes. "Yale has a school for chefs, so does Cornell. There is no limit to the kinds of jobs available. Chef, after all, is the French word for boss."

With all his esoteric knowledge Dr. King proves he has not lost the common touch — he loves peanut butter. But not just any peanut butter. It has to be the good old fashioned kind, with the oil floating on top.

Vietnamese Girl Adopted By Alumnus

A three year old orphaned Vietnamese girl has a happy home in Milwaukee because Joseph M. Dailey and his wife, Barbara, cared enough.

Dailey, a '64 graduate of St. Norbert College, entered the Army in January, 1966 after getting a master's degree in speech from Marquette University. In less than a year he was in Vietnam where he served with the 25th Division.

In traveling around Vietnam, Dailey saw numerous orphaned children. The Vietnamese themselves were doing what they could for them. But even those homeless waifs who were housed in orphanages often lacked such basic necessities as medicine.

"When you see a situation like that," Dailey said, "you feel like doing something to help. I wrote home to Barbara and asked 'How about it?' She said, 'Fine.'"

"It's just something we wanted — you know, like some people want a Cadillac."

And so, when the preliminaries were over and it was determined that the Daileys could become the first Wisconsin couple to adopt a Vietnamese child, Dailey went to a Saigon orphanage to meet the girl who might become his daughter.

The Daileys had already decided they preferred a girl about three years old. The child was selected for them by the authorities. Instead of looking for her immediately when he walked into the orphanage, Dailey started playing with a group of children who clustered around him when he entered.

It was nearly time for their naps. One by one, they got tired and quit playing. Finally, only Dailey and a three year old girl were left. When the two were formally introduced it was found that the child who had chosen to stay with him was Loan, the girl he'd come to see. If there had been any doubt in his mind about adopting her, the question was now settled.

Loan, who was four years old on Dec. 28, seemed happy to go with her new father. But she was not demonstrative.

"She was a little girl who never smiled," Dailey said.

Mrs. Dailey met them at Gen. Mitchell field where she saw her daughter for the first time. Loan still didn't smile. They drove home to their apartment and opened the door. Loan saw the stuffed animals Barbara had bought for her. At once, her oriental reserve was broken.

"She was so happy when she saw those toys — she thought it was the nicest thing in the world," Dailey said.

She smiled then — and has been smiling ever since.

History - A Comparative Approach

Dr. Padden believes that changing the traditional approach to the study of history is vital to the kind of thinking that is needed for world leadership today. "Today's student must be taught to view history as a mode of inquiry into human behavior. If this is done he will emerge with a grasp of history as a profound and dynamic determinant of culture. This is quite different from the older conception of history as a sterile and static accumulation of data."

Padden

The new course employs the comparative approach: comparative religions, comparative race relations, comparative politics and so on. "Depth of understanding of other American cultures provides growing insight into one's own; one learns to go beyond the obvious." This approach, of course, requires reading in many fields: sociology, anthropology, economics and history. Dr. Padden points out that the course is pan-disciplinary and has no real limits. "We wipe out national boundaries and differences of language. More importantly, we ignore the traditional academic barriers between disciplines and areas of human knowledge."

Dr. Padden began his development of this approach several years ago, when he was a professor in the department of history at the University of California at Berkeley. Not until he joined St. Norbert College, however, did he find an adequate opportunity for innovation. "The kind of innovation I was after did not fit the departmental stereotypes that ruled at Berkeley," he explained. "Nearly all major universities are committed to traditions which inhibit starting innovation, and they all suffer from institutional inertia. Under these conditions, an innovator can either conform or leave. In the latter case, there are but two opportunities: either a new institution that is wide open intellectually, or an established institution that is renovating. Or forget it!"

Dr. Padden studied at the University of Michigan and Duke University and took his graduate degrees at the University of California. He is a member of the Latin American Conference of the American Historical Association, The American Society for Ethnohistory, The Latin American Studies Association, the Wisconsin Council of Latin Americanists, the International Education Association and the Midwest Council for the Association for Latin American Studies.

A new approach to the teaching of history has been introduced at St. Norbert College with a course designed to "open a window on the world" for students, according to Dr. Robert Padden, professor of history and originator of the new course.

Titled "Comparative American Societies," the course has aims that are different from those usually found in college history courses. "What the course does is give the student a perspective by which he can place himself and this north central community in which he lives in a meaningful relationship with the rest of the nation and the world," Dr. Padden said. "Green Bay as an isolated unit of culture is relatively meaningless."

"Usually," he added, "racial and national entities are studied by themselves. United States history, for instance, is taken as a slice out of the hemisphere. We study the French in Canada, or perhaps the Spanish in Mexico. All this makes for a neat provincialism which breeds closeness of mind. We need to study them together, as a whole."

One of the fruits of this approach, he noted, is that the student discovers that integration is a problem of the whole western hemisphere. "If there is a single hemispheric theme in a contemporary sense, it is integration. What is going on in Milwaukee today is very relevant to what's going on in Bolivia or Colombia, where they have problems in integrating the peasant community. Our own problems are neither unique nor more painful, and as a nation we need not be embarrassed because we have them."

Dr. Padden's students trace the integration theme back through the centuries. "In the transit of civilization to the western hemisphere the Europeans encountered Indians, and in some instances accepted them, intermarried with them, and in so doing produced the mestizo. This was the creation of an entirely new man on the face of the earth. Biologically, this is the biggest thing that has happened in the last two thousand years. These new men now inhabit over three-fifths of this hemisphere. Neither European nor Indian, the mestizo was held to be inferior. In Anglo-American society he was called 'halfbreed.'"

About the time the mestizo was appearing in numbers the Negro slave was introduced on a large scale; by 1550 all the elements were in place: the negro was a slave, the mestizo was a fourth or fifth-class citizen. The problem since that time has been to incorporate and integrate these people, both socially and economically. And it was and is essentially the same problem whether in French Canada, Spanish Mexico or Green Bay. Integration is a long process. It has been going on for over 400 years and is not over yet."

St. Norbert Looks Financial Challenge Squarely In The Eye

By CAROLYN STEWART

Press-Gazette Staff Writer

There are some, who, in a panic, have sounded the death toll for the small, independent liberal arts college in the face of financial woes and the enrollment of declining proportions of the student populations.

The Rev. Dennis M. Burke, president of St. Norbert College in West De Pere, refuses to look to the bell tower, preferring instead to work on solutions to the small college's problems.

Watching the reversal of college attendance trends since World War II when more than half the degree candidates attended private colleges to the present when, in Wisconsin, 77 per cent of the students are enrolled in public universities, Father Burke still maintains there is "vitality of growth in both," although it is greater in the universities.

Enrollment Increased

Recently compiled Wisconsin higher education enrollment figures show there are 84,316 students in four-year public institutions and 25,900 in the private colleges and universities this year.

In four years, enrollment in all Wisconsin public post-high school institutions has increased 65.9 per cent to 116,300 while the upsurge in private institutions has taken place at a rate of 19.5 per cent, going from 27,500 in 1963 to 32,800 in 1967.

While the signs of life and growth are still present in the small liberal arts college body, Father Burke seeks live-extending funds for the institutions because he is convinced that they have a role to play in the local higher education scene.

In an address prepared for a meeting of insurance men Friday, he explained his view:

"Public and private higher education have offered to all of us a balance of thinking such as a dual system of education alone can achieve. This must continue if the character of our democratic heritage is to survive."

A Stereotyped Scene

He continued, more strongly, in an interview:

"If the day should come when private colleges must close their doors, we would arrive at an educational scene that would be stereotyped and unchallenging."

Thus, diversity, itself, is one of the major reasons Father Burke sees the continuation of the small colleges. Other factors, roles that only the independent school can play, according to Father Burke, are the opportunity to experiment with education, the chance to mingle students and faculty in informal learning situations and the obligation to help educate the whole man in the broad tradition of the liberal arts.

It is the freedom to try new things that is particularly significant the college president feels, because it is free of legislative and public control that is sometimes stifling to the most progressive university.

He notes that the experiments, once proven to be educationally sound, and valuable, then are often taken up by the public universities. Thus, it follows, that the universities can profit from the work of the college.

Has Role to Play

While the liberal arts college has a role to play, Father Burke says only those that are actively fulfilling their responsibility in the dual system of education can and ought to continue.

"I do not mean to say," he explains, "that all will survive. I do, assert, though, that colleges which continue to improve, to meet the challenges of the age, to update and to innovate, that continually strive to strengthen their curriculum, their faculty, the quality of their students, and to meet the needs of the times, will survive."

The St. Norbert president outlines the ideals as applicable to his own institution, but also as representative of the view of the Wisconsin Association of Independent Colleges and Universities of which he is a former president and present executive committee member.

With the association that champions the liberal arts college, in the face of rapidly expanding tax-supported schools, he agrees, "Money is the secret to a lot of this."

"If the private colleges are to continue as challenging institutions," he says, "innovative in their thinking, they too must find a way of financing faculty and curriculum that give them a widespread recognition as the equal of any other institution."

Serves As Example

St. Norbert College serves as an example of the financial situation the independent institutions around the nation are facing.

In 12 years, the St. Norbert College budget has increased 400 per cent, from $759,000 in 1955 to $3,800,000 for the current school year. The enrollment at the college, however, has increased less than three times in that period from 693 in 1955 to 1,714 this year.

To meet the budget demands in an independent college, student tuition and fees have had to be raised at rapid pace. In 1957, students paid $450 a year for classes. A rise of $150 this year has brought total tuition for the school year to $1,050.

Although he admits tuition increases are a burden on the student, Father Burke says they are necessary each year at the present time, because 80 per cent of the cost of operating the college is taken up in faculty salaries.

Cost Is Increasing

The cost of faculty salaries has been increasing at St. Norbert more rapidly than at non-church-related schools, because the proportion of lay to religious teachers has nearly reversed in 20 years.

Before World War II, 90 per cent of the faculty was Norbertine priests who contributed their service. Now only 30 per cent of the faculty are members of the Norbertine Order.

In a letter to parents last December, reporting the rise in tuition, he referred to a decision in 1965 to guarantee a constant tuition rate to incoming students as "ill-advised," and made an unusual request that parents "voluntarily adopt the new rate if at all possible."

Even with the galloping increases in tuition, that many see as forcing private schools to price themselves out of existence, Father Burke reports that tuitions do not cover the costs of operation. Students pay only 70 per cent of their education costs.

Amounts to Subsidy

The remaining 30 per cent amounts to a subsidy, or what Miller Upton, president of Beloit College and president of the Independent colleges association refers to as a "hidden scholarship" of $675 per student, per year.

Above and beyond tuition and fees, Father Burke says the college must raise $1,140,000 this year to make its subsidy to students and operate the college on a balanced budget at the level it has chosen.

Financing is a problem, a serious one, the president says, but he is more hopeful than those he terms the "prophets of demise," seeing several indications that industry, private philanthropy, foundations and government "are aware that this is their problem, too."

The national trend, he reports, in giving to education is on the upswing, not in the proportion needed, but in an encouraging manner. Citing statistics, he says, that of 44 years of recorded private donations to education, 28.3 per cent has been given in the past four years.

Although its part is not as significant as the private donations, foundation grants, too are on the upswing.

Interest is Growing

Local experience encourages the St. Norbert president that industrial interest in education is growing, too. He gave the financing of the new Dr. John R. Minahan Hall of Science as an example, explaining that of three gifts of more than $100,000, two came from locally based industry and the third was from another that operates in this area.

"Nearly all the local industries have contributed to St. Norbert College in one way or another in recent years," he says.

But the most hope is seen in the changes in government attitudes towards higher education. It is very significant, Father Burke says, that there is an increasing conviction among those acquainted with government that federal and state funds for education will grow in the foreseeable future.

There are the $500 state tuition grants for students, and many bills before the State Legislature, one that would increase the grants significantly, he says. He cited a department of Health, Education and Welfare report that the federal government is devoting $4.7 billion to higher education this year.

And, although 80 per cent of federal support to research and special projects goes to a few educational institutions, he is confident that a change is not far off.

A view that is expressed frequently by Beloit's Upton, who has become a spokesman for the small college, Father Burke shares:

Trend Toward Ideal

"There is a trend toward the ideal that state and federal assets ought to make provisions for grants that would equalize the differential between the state college tuition charges and private college tuition charges so the student has full free choice as to which institution he wants to attend."

The St. Norbert president sees the prospect as beneficial to the liberal arts school, as well as to the governments, in the form of savings in building new facilities and schools.

In addition to seeking funds, Father Burke sees non-financial methods for working on solutions to the problem of keeping the small college in existence.

St. Norbert has a history of cooperating with the University of Wisconsin Green Bay Center to share faculty, administration and cultural activities, for which the former Center Dean Dr. T. N. Savides was awarded the 1967 B'nai B'rith Brotherhood award.

Father Burke said that meetings between him and his staff and chancellor Edward Weidner and the assistant chancellors of the new University of Wisconsin are planned to start soon for the exploration of mutual interests.

Cooperation Will Grow

He is not certain how widespread the cooperation is, but is of the opinion that it will grow. "Private and public college cooperation is going to come, especially," he says, "if we look to common sources of state and federal support."

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

AREA CODE 414

February, 1968

Dear Fellow Alumnus:

I hope you are aware of the great strides that St. Norbert College is taking these days. From my fortunate position as President of the National Alumni Association, I can attest to everything you may have read or heard about the college's high standing in the academic world.

It makes me proud to be identified with such a respected institution. As an alumni officer, I am doubly proud of the role our Alumni Annual Giving Fund has played in St. Norbert College advancement.

Together we contributed $29,905.55 to the Annual Alumni Fund in 1967. This amount includes $15,187.25 in pledge payments to the Anselm Keefe Biology Center in the new Dr. John R. Minahan Science Hall. The sum of $12,717.30 was designated for the current operating fund which is utilized for off-setting the ever-increasing deficit which cannot be met by tuition alone. The building fund received a total of $2,001.00 from members of the Alumni Association. In so doing we surpassed the 1966 fund total of $26,177.74 by $3,727.81.

To those of you whose loyalty and generosity made this possible, the Alumni Association and St. Norbert College are deeply indebted. I share with you the personal pleasure and satisfaction inspired by the success of our common cause and urge your continued support.

Cordially,

Corporate Matching Gifts

An ever-increasing number of corporations and companies matches dollar for dollar, or even double, employees' gifts to colleges and universities.

Does your company sponsor such a matching gifts program? If so, you are in a position to double your support of St. Norbert College. Please investigate this unique opportunity.

The following corporations and foundations added to the 1967 Alumni Fund total by matching gifts of their employee-donors:

Aetna Life and Casualty
American Home Products Corp.
Carpenter Steel Foundation
Chrysler Corporation Fund
Cities Service Foundation
Clark Equipment Company
Clevite Foundation
Corn Products Company

Dow Chemical Company
General Electric Foundation
IBM Corporation
Johnson's Wax Fund, Inc.
Kimberly Clark Foundation, Inc.
National Biscuit Company Fdn.
Walker Manufacturing Co.
Xerox Corporation
